

WASHINGTON POST REPORTER INTERVIEWS OHIOAN BONELESS COW PROCESSING RANCH FARMER

GETS WAY MORE INFORMATION THAN HE WANTED...

In other news: Deranged goose man is on the loose again!

*Boneless Bovine department

Writer: Didi Asc

Recently, A well known reporter from the Washington Post came to a local boneless cow ranch to discover how boneless milk was made, and was horrified by what he learned. During his interview he asked many questions, and got more answers than he wanted. "Well da process stards out here, In Dead Cow Heap, Ohio" says farmer Joe shmoe, "where we go through all da cows, picking only da most deranged 'nd sickly looking, we den stretch out 'nd decalcify their cracked and fractured bones. After that, we head over ta a meat processor 'nd beat da bones out of da carcass until it look like a sack of meat, organs 'nd hide. Then to finish the process, and get the cows back alive, we fill them with as much Chernobyl radiation as one can lay their hands on, and that makes the cow start to flop around." The Interveiwer got a unique VIP access tour to the boneless cow milker where he got told that they then get "put in a garbage compactor and have the 'milk' squeezed out of them, they then bleach, deodorize, dye and package it so it doesn't look like bloody goo." The reporter then fell into a nightmarish trance and started babbling strange things, so he was hired as a manager for the ranch. The Washington Post is filing a lawsuit for personal losses and will probably win.

MAN SUES LOOKY LOU FOR PROTON THEFT

*Optical Disillusion Department

On Wednesday, a man walked out of a bookstore with a poetry book about animals. As he was walking down the street, a man by the name of Liam took a quick gander at the paperback that this man had recently acquired. The man took notice of this and accused the man of grand theft light particles. He claimed that the protons of his poetry book had been absorbed by Liam's selfish retinas. The man sued him for 100,000 dollars to cover the emotional damages caused in the incident

ROBBERY AT CRUSTY'S CRAISINS®

MYSTERIOUS CROOK STILL NOT FOUND

*Berry bad crimes department

Writer: Craig Ozzy

Crusty's Craisins-which is well known for supplying the community with their dried cranberries-is facing financial troubles after the robbery last week. The break-in occurred on Thursday, around 4:30 at night. Cameras show a shady figure sneakily breaking through a window, leaping towards the craisins, and chowing down on them like an animal. About ten minutes later, probably when the bandit was full, he barehandedly lugged 53 canisters of craisins back out through the window and disappeared into thin air. Though the robber's identity is still unknown, some strands of blond hair were traced. Detectives also found a strange sack of mangled plastic fork heads, whose purpose is still unknown. Crusty's lost around 68% of their craisin stock, and prices expect to rise as the lost cranberries replenish.

OLD LADY FINDS DRIED UP HORSES IN ATTIC--APPRAISER CLAIMS

*Attic Addicts department THEY'RE WORTH MILLIONS Writer: Freen Feather

On Thursday, an old decaying woman named Gerty Gertrude invited her great great great grandchildren to her flat. They were prowling around her attic when they found six near mint condition dried up horses sitting in the corner. The youngest great great great granddaughter (age 47) took them to an auction house and the appraiser claimed them to be... six of a kind! He said they would go for auction for millions! Later that week the dried-up horses were sold to a group of apes! Lord knows where they got all that money from! No word on what the apes plan to do, but most people speculate 1 horse was given to each of the members of the ape group (being made up of six primates total, it seems to make plausible sense)

CRAZED MAN IN GOOSE COSTUME PROSECTUTED FOR CHASING PEDESTRIANS

*Goose on the Loose department Writer: Clarissa Cook

Yesterday, a crazy man (who was later identified to be named Bill Featherbottom) was charged for invasion of privacy after running amok and biting random people on the streets of Toledo. He seemed to target civilians with bright colored clothing, charging towards them as he emitted unholy honks and hisses. "Linda Patel - a heavily injured victim - was interviewed after the incident. "I was just strolling along with my new neon orange shirt, when suddenly, I heard an earsplitting honk from behind. before I could turn around, I felt the body of some heavy, wet creature landing on top of me, squawking loudly and nipping at my back. I twisted and turned, trying to de-attach him, but dat sucker clung on like a hitchhiker on an Ohio truck!" The police department received many calls about the incident, but when they arrived, the goose-man begun flapping his arms, and took off to the sky with ease. A search party was sent out to find him, and surely enough, he was caught within a few hours - wading through a pond with other geese. The search party was able to trap him quite easily, using bread to lure him into a cage. The cause for this behavior was quickly identified after 20 grams of Fun dip® were found in his bloodstream. "It'z for da berds, man", were his final words after before he was taken to prison.

JAIL SENTENCE EXPECTED TO LAST 10.333333 YEARS